College of Health LEAP

College of Health (CoH) LEAP is a first year learning community for students interested in careers in health.

CoH LEAP is a year-long small class called a “seminar.” These seminars:

Connect you to
- The professor who teaches both Fall and Spring semester.
- The classmates you’ll be with for both semesters.
- Faculty, advisors, and librarians in the College of Health and elsewhere on campus.

Help you to develop
- Critical thinking and effective reading strategies.
- Fluency in oral and written expression.
- The ability to work effectively in teams.
- Library research skills (LEAP 1060 an extra hour of credit is available for completing library work folded into the seminar).
- Familiarity with your university campus and the academic, service, and professional opportunities it offers.

Fall Semester LEAP 1100 examines literature about diverse cultural groups in the United States for the purpose of developing cultural competence in providing health care to these groups. This seminar fulfills the University Diversity Requirement and a General Education Humanities Requirement.

Spring Semester LEAP 2004 examines bioethical issues through the framework of the humanities in order to situate health care within its essential human context. This seminar fulfills a General Education Humanities Requirement.

In addition to College of Health LEAP, we recommend you take:
- Special LEAP section of WRTG 2011 where you’ll study with other LEAP students. This fulfills the lower division writing requirement.
