College of Health (CoH) LEAP is a first year learning community for students interested in careers in offered by the College Of Health.

Fall Semester LEAP 1100 examines literature about diverse cultural groups in the United States for the purpose of developing cultural competence in providing health care to these groups. This seminar fulfills the University Diversity Requirement and a General Education Humanities Requirement.

Spring Semester LEAP 2004 examines bioethical issues through the framework of the humanities in order to situate health care within its essential human context. This seminar fulfills a General Education Humanities Requirement.

College of Health LEAP connects you to:
- The professor who teaches both Fall and Spring semester.
- The classmates you’ll be with for both semesters.
- Faculty, advisors, and librarians in the College of Health and elsewhere on campus.

College of Health LEAP helps you to develop:
- Critical thinking and effective reading strategies.
- Fluency in oral and written expression.
- The ability to work effectively in teams.

Library research skills are taught as part of your LEAP class. In the spring semester you can sign up for LEAP 1060 to receive an extra hour of credit for completing library work folded into your LEAP class.
